LOCHAN NA H-ACHLAISE, RANNOCH MOOR,
WEST HIGHLANDS, SCOTLAND

Reflected in the clear, still waters of Lochan na h-Achlaise, the snow-covered upper slopes of Rannoch Moor ascend to meet the sky. Designated a National Heritage site, there is a bleak beauty in this plateau of boggy moorland rising to wild, windswept hillsides.

WINDMILL, NORFOLK BROADS, NORFOLK, ENGLAND

Overnight frost dusts the reeds and grasses lining the wintry waterways and channels of the Norfolk Broads. There are a number of 19th-century mills still standing and in working order across the Broads, their iconic shape and sails conspicuous on the skyline in this flat landscape.

Built in 1863 as one of a pair (its partner being the High Lighthouse), the Low Lighthouse aided safe passage for mariners entering the River Orwell bound for the ports of Felixstowe and Harwich until 1917. Restored in 1988, a dilapidated narrow causeway prevents re-opening to the public.

KILCHURN CASTLE, LOCH AWE, STRATHCLYDE, SCOTLAND

Reflected in the glassy waters of Loch Awe, the stone-built battlements of Kilchurn Castle have stood guard over this loch since the mid-15th century. Abandoned by the end of the 1700s, the castle served as a fortress, a comfortable residence with five-storey tower house, and a garrison stronghold.
